

Teachers Are Revolutionaries

True teachers are revolutionaries.

Revolutionaries who are committed to their cause and are willing to sacrifice everything in the fight for liberation. They wage war against the status quo;

they fight racism, injustice, and inequity

where ever it's found.

Their schools and campus' are their battlefields

where they experience victory and defeat on a daily basis.

They forge forward knowing that their struggles are small when compared to the lives of their students.

It's for the youth that they fight this revolution. A revolution where the casualties are students who submit themselves to a system that preaches inferiority and ignorance.

Revolutionary teachers know that schools as they stand today are but factories meant to produce a blind citizenry, unconscious, and unable to recognize the oppressive indoctrination of our society. Revolutionary teachers lead and provide a space where the masses can be educated and empowered. Then and only then, can liberation become a possibility.

The day that students arm themselves with the intellectual artillery to demand change is the awakening that revolutionaries wait for.

This is the day the people recognize the power they possess and become revolutionaries themselves.

This is the day that the line between students and teachers is blurred as they stand side by side as comrades in a revolution to end all forms of oppression.

This is the day where everything will have changed and our education will have become our liberation!
